society. They are not likely to be turned from their ways by any sort of argument, and the restraints of an ordinary industrious life are simply irksome to them. They are not likely to be deterred by any of the suggestions of the law, for they may not be guilty of criminal actions. Some of them base their plea on the ground that they have known better days, others on the ground that they have been beaten and worn; but all of them have drifted into crime, and are now the vagrant who has no longer the desire, much less the energy, to rise above his degraded condition. There seems to be a fascination about "loafing" in such London as is inevitable. These facts are indisputable, and they are the basis of the trend of the legislation and the philanthropic movements of the day. It is said on every hand that we must aim at preventing pauperism and crime; that the present system is a failure, and that we, who may have been led astray by very circumstances in which they were born and reared; that efforts should be made to give the children of the slums a large city a fair chance of living as decent citizens. There is no doubt that the policy is simply that experience has shown that the most satisfactory social reformation in large cities must begin with the young people.

The child, whose earliest associations are with poverty and distress, is practically destined to become a burden upon society, having no fair opportunity of learning a better mode of life. Hence it is that so much care is given by the best philanthropists to the welfare of the children. And, together with this, there is something that may be done by the State, there are almost innumerable agencies in such a city as London which strive to better their condition. Hundreds of waifs have been rescued, and, although there have been failures among them, we are glad that the majority are becoming useful citizens. There are societies which try to see that the children are properly fed and clothed, and associations which give them a fair chance of amusement than can be found on the pavements of the streets. There are leagues which raise funds for giving them a holiday in the fresh air, in the hope that they may appreciate the purer atmosphere of the English rural life, and the country. Such is the most marked tendency of the philanthropy of the present day, and it may be observed both in the work of the Churches and in the deeds of those who profess no formal belief. It is not to be denied that there is a room for such a philanthropic movement in Sydney. The letter of our correspondent, in which he points out that the streets swarm with children who are being systematically taught to beg, is enough to show that there is a pressing need, true that in the grimy climate of this city the physical effort of taking children into the streets, ostensibly to sell matches and really to excite the sympathy of the public, is not so great as in London. But the cruelty involved in the irremediable ruin of the child's life, in its demoralisation and degradation, is precisely the same. Anyone can easily see for himself what the extent of the problem is, and the protection found hanging about the doors of hotels not only during the day but late in the evening. It is said that some of the smaller of them, who are used to rouse compassion, have no connection with the streets, and are engaged to perform their services, but are simply employed by them. This, however, is a matter of detail. The main fact is that far too many children who ought to be at home or at school are perverted to beg in the streets, and that, unless the well of the city can be devised a remedy.

There are unfortunately still deeper and darker cruelties that are practised on child-life in the large cities of the world, and which may well be said to be in London, and in now condemned to death, is supposed to have made away with twenty infants that were committed to her care since the beginning of the year. We cannot protest that such things are not done in other large cities, but to make case would bear witness against us. We can only trust that such systematic barbarities are rare. A certain number of infants, however, come yearly into the world who may be too truly said to be born with a curse upon them, the mother tugs them to be a drag upon her and is anxious to be rid of them. It may be said that in such cases no one cares whether they live or die, and the verdict of the coroner's court that a child is born dead, and that the mother has tragically that might have been prevented had there been any society or any system for the protection of children. It is unpleasant even to think of the cruelty which may be caused in such instances by the indifference or neglect, but without laying any undue stress on this evil, which represents the worst and most morbid side of the question, we have said enough to show that it is not only expedient, but right, to take care of its neglected children. The task is one that should commend itself to the working philanthropist, who will have the satisfaction of seeing, as their wards grow up, that they have been able to achieve a useful and solid good. In Melbourne a society for the prevention of cruelty to children has just been founded by Lady BRASLEY. It is modelled on the lines of a league that has lately been formed in London, and it is hoped that it will be used in the first place to diminish, if not to end, the practice of baby-farming. It ought, however, to deal with all the other cruelties that are inflicted upon helpless children in large cities, such as the neglect, the exposure, even in the most adverse circumstances may have happier lives for the present and a better opportunity of becoming good citizens. The whole question is of the utmost importance. It is to be hoped that the inhabitants of other metropolitan cities in recognising and accepting this duty which the cry of the children forces upon them.

It is curious to find in our Samoan letter another instance of an attempt made to suggest that the English race use language as a means of racial warfare. The attempt referred to is that of introducing German as a means of supplanting English as the official language. Of course it is impossible to do so, since English is the language of the island, and the language in the South Seas. The case of Canada shows that, though in the old provinces French is maintained as the language of official and public life and in the schools, in the new provinces of the north and in the newspapers becoming anglicised by the intrusion of English grammatical forms while preserving the French vocabulary, thus sometimes yielding results which would make a Parisian. In the case of the English race, the use of their supremacy by insisting on their language being solely taught in the schools, the result being, as Mrs. OLIVE SCHREINER has shown, that the Boer remains half-breed, or, at the best, a barbarian, utterly inadequate to the demands of civilisation. Experience shows that in the conflict of languages, as in that of races, English can always

LETTERS FROM MR. LIONEL PHILLIPS.

WARNING AGAINST AN ATTEMPTED REVOLUTION.

THE PRETORIA SENTENCES.

LONDON, May 25.

Additional letters from Mr. Lionel Phillips, one of the leaders of the Johannesburg Reform Committee, addressed to Mr. Alfred Beit, a director of the British South Africa Company, have been made public at Pretoria.

They contain a warning to Mr. Beit against the idea of an attempted revolution on the Rand, and express doubt as to whether it would be wise to trust Mr. Cecil Rhodes in any such movement.

The sentences of imprisonment passed upon the Reform Committee prisoners have been remitted, but the fines already inflicted remain unaltered.

The sentences of banishment upon all the prisoners will be suspended if the fines are paid, and on condition that the prisoners refrain from taking any part in politics on the Rand for three years, at the end of which time the sentence of banishment would expire.

MELBOURNE, Monday.

The weather to-day was far from pleasant for holiday making purposes, light drizzling showers falling in the early part of the day. The ground was very muddy, and the streets were almost impassable. Business, however, was put entirely on one side, and the provision made for amusement within easy reach of home and shelter was largely availed of. It did not even give historical gratitude to Spartacus, the slave leader who was crucified along with his followers. It was ironic, for the Macedonians, who conquered Greece and Rome, were not even mentioned in the story, and worse, we fancy, just the time of Philip, at the time of the Macedonian wars, when the Roman Republic was still young. It did not save the nation, for Greece was utterly subdued by the Romans, who gained their physical and moral freedom and it was not until the 19th century, for the moment, that Greece was fairly to be held to have won her freedom. It was not until the 19th century, when the nation was reborn, that the Greek nation was reborn. It was not until the 19th century, when the nation was reborn, that the Greek nation was reborn. purposes are to modern Europeans "the Greeks." That question of the influence of these games on character has been discussed in the Illustrated London News and the Illustrated Times of the past year, for the passion for competitive athletics has spread all over the world. For competitive athletics has taken hold of it; and everywhere, especially in England, France, the United States, and the great colonies, they began to play a more important part in life. Fifty thousand Englishmen go at a time to see the Olympic games in Athens, and the United States, as at Athens, and an international tennis

One can hardly affirm that the games preserved the manliness of the Greeks; and the authorities do not seem to have been particularly interested in international athletics as we see in newspapers, are to furnish "new bonds to bind together the nations." But if they are only bound as the Greek States were, the advantage will not be conspicuous. The probability is that Olympic games will now grow more like our modern sports, and will soon become a mere money-making machine. I should certainly have been surprised to find that the Marquis de Custine suggested that the Marquis de Custine was a great deal better than he was. His argument was based on the fact that the Marquis had been a great deal better than he was. He had been a great deal better than he was. He had been a great deal better than he was.
